The conference theme will bring together presenters from a variety of disciplines to share their expertise and understanding with environmental health practitioners. The conference content highlights the many aspects of our roles that involve risk – risk to individuals, risk to communities, risk to the environment, risk to public health standards and even risk to ourselves. Environmental health is a risky business and without it our communities wouldn't enjoy clean air and water, safe food, a healthy environment or benefit from effective and sustainable disease prevention and emergency management strategies.

You are invited to consider presenting a paper at the conference.
